FORMER TINLEY LBR. MAN FOUND UNCONSCIOUS, DIES

Hans Vick, aged 52 years, former manager of the Tinley Park yard of the Beatty Lumber Co., was found unconscious in his automobile in the garage at the Dick Bruening home Tuesday noon by Mrs. Bruening.

Walter Mancke and Police Chief C. A. Steinhagen took the stricken man to the Oak Forest hospital.

Physicians after a careful examination were at a loss to account for Mr. Vick's condition, but felt it was caused by a heart attack.

Mr. Vick died at 11:20 o'clock Thursday morning. He had no near relatives in this country but has relatives living in Canada.

Mr. Vick has been in the employ of the Homewood Lumber Yard. He has no relatives in this country and has been rooming with the Bruening family for a number of years.

New Lenox Loses In Opening Foot Ball Game

The newly organized Nem Lenox football team, playing under lights for the first time this year, also suffered their first defeat of the season at the hands of the husky Mt. Carmel aggregation of Chicago Heights in an interesting game at the New Lenox field Thursday night September 28. With their speeding backs and powerful line, Mt. Carmel carried the fight to the New Lenox youngsters from the opening whistle and from the time Britt, right guard of Mt. Carmel recovered a New Lenox fumble back on the goal line for a touchdown in the opening minutes of the first quarter, they were never in danger. Four touchdowns and three successful tries for extra point, combined with a field goal from the 30 yd. line accounted for their thirty points.

The feature of the game was a 75-yard run by Gounchor of Mt. Carmel in the third quarter to the New Lenox 10 yd. line, where he was brought down by Lenz, left end of New Lenox. The two Novak brothers starred for New Lenox on the defensive, while Fitzer of New Lenox caught a 20-yard pass thrown by quarterback Crosby for New Lenox's longest single gain.

New Lenox will play a return match with Mt. Carmel Sunday, Oct. 1, at Chicago Heights. The New Lenox team is coached by Ray Gorman, who says he is desirous of booking further games of the season.

And They Chopped Down The Old Pine Tree In Reality

As the popular of song several years ago used to go "And they chopped down the old pine tree" so it was done in reality in the Orland Park school yard one night the past week when some miscreant chopped down and hauled away a pine tree which Mrs. Mabel Eckberg of the Swedish Coffee Shop of Orland Park had donated to the school.

Recover Kidnap Victim's Auto

The automobile which Owen McCarthy, state police employee was driving last Tuesday afternoon when he was kidnaped and taken to Mokena, was found Monday night in LaGrange.

The spare tire had been taken from the car, a 1939 Nash, and an electric razor was missing from the glove compartment. McCarthy said his auto had been driven 450 miles since it was taken last Tuesday and there were scratches on the fenders. McCarthy's set of golf clubs were left in the trunk.

No trace, however, has been found of the gun-man kidnaper.

New Era of Convenience

Along with modern developments in farming methods, the farm home, and especially the kitchen, has entered a new era of convenience which equals that of the advantages available in even the largest city. The same improvement in kitchen equipment also is within the reach of homemakers in smaller communities, who, together with farm homemakers, are discovering the pleasures offered by modern kitchen devices.

One of the newest and most practical appliance offered for farm and small community kitchens is that recently introduced by a well known electric range and refrigerator manufacturer. This new kitchen appliance is a combination electric range and kitchen heater, a double purpose range that cooks with electricity and heats with wood, soft coal, anthracite coal, and other hard fuels.

"The old wood or coal stove that is used both for cooking and heating no longer is required in the kitchen," said Clarence Beagley, local Frigidaire range dealer. "There are obvious disadvantages in cooking with wood or coal which include such things as lack of automatic control, constant watching of foods, excessive heat in warmer weather, and many other objectionable features. The combination Frigidaire electric range and kitchen heater serves the homemaker as a dependable and convenient cooking appliance and in addition provides the quantity of heat necessary to maintain a comfortable temperature.

"Such features as a one-piece cooking top, all-porcelain cabinet, four surface cooking units each of which has five separate temperature adjustments for the five basic cooking operations, and a full size oven, give this new Frigidaire combination range the ability to provide all the usefulness of a standard model used exclusively for cooking. The homemaker who has one in her kitchen enjoys all of the pleasures of modern cooking, and in addition secures the heating service commonly supplied by an ordinary stove.

"A hot water supply also is provided for in the combination range, as a water back and coil may be installed in the kitchen heater section."

Cook Co., Families Pay Hidden Taxes

Families in Cook County pay an estimated $24,082,812 in hidden taxes annually through their purchases of food, a National Consumers Tax Commission survey showed today.

"Nearly eight per cent of the total food bill represents shifted taxes buried in the price of every purchase," the report stated. "These unseen levies, for example, take 11 per cent of butter costs, 6 1/2 per cent of bread costs, 10 1/2 per cent of sliced bacon and 14 1/2 per cent of the cost of coffee."

The report was made public through Mrs. Franklin M. Miller, of Chicago, national committee member, who leads NCTC study groups in about 135 communities in the educational crusade against "unnecessary consumer-penalizing taxes." The report added:

"Chief offenders, and those that fall most heavily on lower income families, are hidden taxes. These are levied originally against the producer, manufacturer, shipper and distributor. Unable to absorb the load, each must pass on a share of its taxes and the consumer ultimately pays them, usually without knowing it."

The commission, in whose non-partisan crusade groups in approximately 5,200 communities have launched tax study programs, said the hidden tax figure does not include the many other hidden and direct taxes families here have to pay.

The food tax estimate was computed from NCTC averages based on last available U. S. Bureau of the census figures which placed 1935 food sales in the country at $308,754,000. Government estimates of total sales in the country last year approximate the total in the 1935 study, the NCTC said.

Honor Tinley Man At Farewell Dinner

The farewell party sponsored by the Tinley Park Business Men's Association in honor of one of their fellow members, Frank Schmutte and his wife was held at the G. Dini place last Thursday evening and was well attended. About 35 members and their wives attended. The honors of the office of master of ceremonies was delegated to Albert Elmore and he did a fine job.

Following the dinner each guest was asked to make some appropriate remark. At the close of the dinner and speech making, all enjoyed cards and dancing and the guests remained until the wee small hours of the morning. They all joined in wishing the honored couple much happiness in their new location near Tucson, Arizona.

Mr. Schmutte operated a market and grocery in Tinley Park for several years and made many friends.

FRANKFORT TO HOLD MARDI GRAS OCT. 27-28

The Frankfort Civic Club will sponsor something unique in the entertainment line on the nights of October 27th and 28th when they hold a Mardi Gras in the Frankfort school auditorium. There will be a regular carnival spirit with gaily colored costumes, various booths and a creepy "chamber of horrors". Watch for more details about this outstanding coming event. There will be additional information given each week from now on up to the date of the event.

From all indications this affair will be one of the most pretentious given in Frankfort for some time.

Start Economy Drive In Will County

The Finance Committee of the County Board of Supervisors has made an excellent start in the drive for economy in County Government.

They have recommended for consideration by the County Board a budget of $350,192.77 for expenditures from the County General Fund. On closer inspection, we find that included in this budget is a claim by an estate of $7,123.93 which they are required to pay and a provision of $27,618.24 for the paying off of liabilities already incurred. This leaves them $315,450.60 for operating purposes. This recommended budget is $79,124.99 below the budget for the present year's operation.

The Finance Committee has not yet approached the limit in economy. Considering, however, the size of the problem before them, and the objections which they must overcome at every step, we wish to express our appreciation to Supervisors H. E. Ehlers, John P. Conrad and Michael J. Stephan for the courtesy which they have shown to us and for the sincere effort that they are making towards economy.

We sincerely hope that the County Board as a whole will recognize their obligation to the good of the County and support the Finance Committee wholeheartedly in their present budget.

Douglas Sutherland, Jr.
Executive Secretary.

To describe the pleasure given by the guest artist, Mrs. A. H. Swett in her presentation of a trip to New Guinea would be beyond space.

It was a wonderful occasion—praise was to be heard everywhere.

Tea was served. This was truly a splendid occasion.

Grace D. Hannum, Press and Pub.

Last week we brought you Governor Horner's proclamation regarding Citizenship Day to be observed throughout the state. Through the efforts of the Mokena Civic Association plans have now been completed to celebrate the event in an appropriate manner.

Why all this fuss and bother about Citizenship Day? What is the idea, and what good do we get out of it? Let me explain. Read carefully.

In our day and age a great number of American people no longer value their rights and privileges as citizens, as did the generations before us. As a result corrupt politics have grown to alarming proportions. We have been sleeping when we should have been guarding our liberties with great care. The enemies of our liberties have not been sleeping. As proof note all the foreign "isms" that have cropped up in the past twenty years. It is not yet too late to fight off these evils. We must do this if we want to keep the liberties for which our forefathers bled and died. But how can we fight? The first step in this direction is an important one. We can perform all the duties required of us as citizens of this great country. Yes, citizens have duties. We ought to find out what these duties are and then do them. That is where a Citizenship Day program comes in.

The program purposes to impress on the audience the great privileges of American Citizenship and to remind each and everyone of the duties such citizenship implies. Especially does it intend to impress this on the minds of those who have in the past year reached voting age. During the program these last mentioned young citizens will also receive a certificate of their citizenship. It is for this reason that we asked all those who have reached the age of 21 years within the last 12 months to fill out the blank in last week's News-Bulletin.

Incidentally, Mokena is the first town in Will County to observe Citizenship Day. This will be quite a distinction in view of the fact that this patriotic movement is growing fast and, we believe, will soon be observed throughout the nation. Let us make our initial program a success by turning out 100% on Sunday afternoon—October 15. Next week we shall publish the program in full. Watch for it.

Mokena also takes this opportunity to invite other villages in this area to participate in the program. Especially does it invite the young men and women who have reached voting age since Oct. 15, 1938 to send their names to Editor Wm. Semmler. All who do this will receive a very pretty certificate of their citizenship which they will prize highly and for which they will be justly proud. So, send in your names and join Mokena in this patriotic movement.

Engineer Graduates Have Best Luck Finding Jobs This Year, Colleges Say

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

NEW YORK.—Some folks don't hang much with book-learnin', but figures don't lie, either, and a survey of employment in industry indicates that the fellow with a diploma has the right ammunition for keeping the wolf from the door.

Parents who have scrimped these last four years to pay Junior's tuition at college will be heartened by one characteristic of the business upturn noted for the first six months of the year: The 150,000 young Americans graduated this June from the nation's colleges have found chances of landing jobs definitely better than last year's crop.

Rosiest of all the reports, with a few months gone by to let this year's hopefuls find out just how it feels to go knocking on doors, comes from Columbia university, whose Secretary of Appointments Robert F. Moore estimates that the 1939 class boasts a batting average twice as high in the Employment League as last year's class. More than 55 per cent of the graduates are already employed, he says.

Only 14 Schools Show Drop.

Hardly less optimistic are the findings of the family economics bureau of the Northwestern National Life Insurance company, of Minneapolis, Minn., which conducted an extensive survey of placement opportunities for 1939 graduates. Of 100 universities and colleges reporting, 63 indicated substantial increases in positions available for graduates this year as compared with 1938. Twenty-three said things looked just about the same as last year, while only 14 reported a drop in the number of jobs available.

The greatest demand, according to Mr. Moore of Columbia, "has come from employers in various businesses who wish to recruit material for executive positions."

This seems to agree with the thinking of Dr. Karl T. Compton, president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Boston. Writing the foreword of a new book, he describes a survey of 54,000 officials of 500 companies which indicates that a college-trained man is 18 times as likely to be president of an industrial corporation as a non-college man, 12½ times as likely to be treasurer, twice as likely to be in charge of production, 18 times as likely to be an engineer, and 12 times as likely to be a sales official.

Weapon for Job Hunters.

The book in which Dr. Compton's foreword appears is "Engineering Opportunities," edited by R. W. Clyne and published by D. Appleton-Century; it describes the chances of the young graduate engineer in each of 28 fields, with each field described by an engineer who has already attained success in it. The espoused purpose of the book is to afford young engineers an opportunity to learn something of the practical problems, as well as the opportunities, in the field they wish to enter, before they seek an interview with the employment manager. Chapters cover industries as widely divergent as aluminum and photography.

ENGINEERS LEAD—Among this year's 150,000 college graduates, engineers get first call. This young man is testing a casting under X-ray in one of the great industrial laboratories.

Almost without exception, the schools which offer engineering courses report the demand to be higher for engineers than for men of other training. Industrial, chemical, electrical and mechanical engineers lead, with the most active demand found in the chemical, automotive, oil, steel and electrical industries.

From the University of Pittsburgh, in the heart of the "engineering belt," comes one of the most glowing reports. Pitt says that in eight months its placement bureau had found full-time jobs for 20 per cent more graduates than during the entire year from June, 1937, to June, 1938. Most requests were for various types of engineers with business training, particularly salesmanship.

Questionnaire Substantiates Trend.

According to the Engineers' Council for Professional Development, approximately 9,000 engineering students were slated for graduation during the calendar year 1939. Expressions of opinion that there are jobs to be snared by the industrious are corroborated by the Journal of Engineering Education, which reports a survey on employment conducted among 300 leading industries. The 122 industries which replied to the publication's questionnaire reported the annual employment of more than 2,500 engineering graduates.

For graduates in all fields, all institutions report starting salaries at about the same level as last year. Most optimistic reports come from the east, central and middlewestern states, with a greater proportion of the schools in the West and Southwest reporting no change.

Wasn't it Horace Greeley who said, "Go west, young man, go west!"

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Reviewed by CARTER FIELD

President Roosevelt was reluctant to call congress into special session this early . . . He wanted to postpone it until much later . . . Sure to be long debate, especially in the senate, over the neutrality act . . . Senator Bridges, just now, is the most active candidate for the presidential nomination.

WASHINGTON.—There were three big reasons why President Roosevelt reluctantly called congress into special session at this time, instead of postponing the call until much later, as he had hoped.

The three reasons, in the order named, were Russia, Italy, and a group of senators including notably William E. Borah of Idaho, Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan and Arthur Capper of Kansas.

Russia and Italy figured for obvious reasons. Russian troops have invaded Poland. Nobody knows what she plans to do—how far her agreements with Hitler will carry her. Italy is neutral, but prepared for war up to the hilt. The British and French are trying their best not only to keep her from joining Germany, but to bring her in on their side. This last is not so much for the assistance Italian soldiers would render, but to provide an open path through which the British and French could attack Germany, thus short-circuiting the Siegfried line, and also to prevent the flowing of food and supplies into Germany. This last is vital because the British and French governments are counting on eventual victory through strangulation more than military triumphs.

The biggest single factor which could be brought to play on both Russia and Italy, obviously, would be some convincing evidence that, in the long run, Germany must certainly be defeated. Anything which convinced either Stalin or Mussolini of that would be sure to keep Stalin neutral, and to induce Mussolini to play along with London and Paris.

Obviously, also, a very potent factor in convincing Stalin and Mussolini of this would be a forceful demonstration that the United States was so strongly on the side of Britain and France that it would take only a little push to bring this country into the war on their side.

Roosevelt dreaded idea of Long Tirades in Congress. Roosevelt disliked the idea of an extra session, at first, because he feared speeches would be made which would misrepresent this picture—would do a great deal of harm, in fact, in their effect on the European situation. He dreaded the idea of long tirades, making front-page headlines in Berlin, Rome and Moscow, by such senators as Gerald P. Nye, Borah and Vandenberg.

But—Borah, Nye, Vandenberg and Capper burst out on the front pages of the country's newspapers anyhow, with strong statements which were represented in Rome, Berlin and Moscow not as minority views, but as the platform of the political party in the United States which probably would win the next election!

Which removed the objection to the extra session, and intensified the reasons justifying it.

Repeal of Arms Embargo Desired Early as Possible

There is no way, so far as can be seen at present, to prevent a very long debate in the upper chamber.

This is important, both to the administration and to business. The White House is anxious that business men in general, and prospective manufacturers of guns, ammunition, airplanes, etc., in particular, should be sure of fairly speedy repeal as soon as possible. The point here is to prevent a wholesale exodus of capital seeking such war profits to Canada.

The President's interest in this is, strangely enough, in line with his general interest for years, in the workers rather than in the capitalists who employ them—or, as the capitalists involved would say—who provide the jobs for the workers.

As the administration sees the picture the obvious course for a capitalist interested in setting about the manufacture of arms, ammunition, airplanes or anything else on the embargoed list, would be to have a plant constructed right here—provided—was the sure the embargo would be lifted speedily.

Otherwise, that obvious thing for that capitalist to do would be to build a plant in Canada, where he would be sure of a friendly government, no restrictions on his exports, all sorts of concessions, such as priority for his shipments of material, and a firm policy by the government against any strike tending to slow down his production.

So the capitalist, the White House figures, might be even better off if he did move to Canada. But American workmen would not be. For obviously in Canada idle Canadian workers would have first call. Their government would see to that.

Wants Capital to Confine Operations to United States

The other side of the picture, and one that the President wants stressed, is that the capitalist in question would be much better off in the days to come if he confines his operations to the United States and thus gives employment and buying power to this country. This is true, the White House believes, whether the United States should later become involved in the war or not.

If the United States remains neutral, there is no doubt about it. Certainly, as Canada gives more and more aid to Britain in the war, she must raise taxes, even on visiting munition makers. Much of the profits will thus be lost through war taxes.

Also, it is pointed out, what is to be done with the plant after peace finally comes? If the plant is inside the United States, inside our customs barriers, there will be an incomparably greater opportunity to turn it to some peacetime occupation that will be profitable. This problem will be tough enough, anyhow, as many production industries not connected with "arms, ammunition and implements of war" will encounter a sharp letdown at that time. Presumably Europe will begin a feverish competition to regain its markets, lost for the duration of the war, in Latin America and elsewhere in the world, which the United States will have been supplying.

Senator Bridges Is Out for Presidential Nomination

Sen. H. Styles Bridges of New Hampshire is the most active candidate for the presidential nomination in any party, if one is to judge by the mass of boosting material received by newspapers and magazines from his publicity bureau. Old-timers are unable to remember any candidate who was ever nominated by that route, but every now and then there is an interesting point, and one with merit, in the Bridges handouts.

For instance, a dissertation on the notion that a man must come from a big, pivotal state in order to have a chance. The Bridges press agents riddle this hoary political maxim very effectively. They are perfectly right that state pride, on which politicians count so much, functions only spasmodically when it comes to delivering electoral votes.

The Bridges press agents fail to mention it, but it actually did deliver electoral votes if one goes back to 1896. In that year the Democratic national convention defied the big pivotal state notion and named William Jennings Bryan as its candidate. Bryan was crushingly defeated, of course, but he did carry his own state of Nebraska, with eight electoral votes.

However, when he ran again, in 1900, McKinley carried it. The tide was too strong, just as it was too strong in 1936 for Alfred M. Landon to carry his own small state of Kansas, which seemed to be seething with state pride during the campaign.

Nor did the addition of "Brother Charlie" Bryan to the Democratic national ticket in 1924, for second place, result in Nebraska's going for Davis and Bryan. It went overwhelmingly for Coolidge, as did West Virginia, the birthplace and political background of John W. Davis, head of the ticket.

Some More Examples Out Of The Political Past

New York state voted heavily for Alfred E. Smith, giving him prodigious majorities when he was running for governor, every time at least except in 1920, when the Harding landslide pulled him down. In that election he ran 1,000,000 votes ahead of his ticket, but was beaten. Yet when he ran for President in 1928 New York gave its electoral votes to Herbert Hoover by a small but safe majority.

The truth is that politically New York has little state pride. It is almost too big to care. There is no such feeling as exists in some of the smaller states where the local boy who has made good is regarded, frequently, as a neighbor. Pennsylvania, up to 1934, was so heavily Republican that neither party thought of looking there for a candidate. Yet the late Philander C. Knox would have been nominated for President by the Republicans if Hiram W. Johnson had been willing to run with him as vice president! In which event Johnson would have been President, for Knox died shortly thereafter.

One has to skip the next state in electoral strength, Illinois, and get down to Ohio to find real local pride. There is plenty of that in the Buckeye state, but also plenty of bitterness as between factions, as when enemies of Warren G. Harding fought him so bitterly in the primaries that they captured some delegates for Leonard Wood, and when enemies of Sen. Frank B. Willis, in 1928, fought him when he was trying to land the delegation to the convention that named Hoover.

Spying's Nice Work Until You Get Shot

Good Pay, Villas and Champagne, but the Future's Doubtful

SPY—Johanna Hoffman, hairdresser on the German liner, "Bremen," after being sentenced to four years in prison for espionage in New York federal court.

INNOCENT—Natasha, wife of Mikhail Gorin, Pacific coast representative of a Russian tourist bureau, who was acquitted of espionage charges in San Francisco.

LOYAL—Kate Moog, German-born nurse, who refused Nazi offer to open a "villa" in Washington where U. S. officials might be induced to divulge secrets.

"MATA HARI"—Miss Yoshimiko Kawashima, "Mata Hari of Japan," who was murdered while vacationing in Tientsin after leading a spy ring at Hong Kong.

LONDON.—M. I. 5 is at work again.

As in 1914, Great Britain's secret agents are matching wits with those of Germany, and most nations are increasing their espionage and counter-espionage work. Even the United States has added to its secret service under President Roosevelt's "limited emergency" declaration.

But only in England, France and Germany are today's spies getting real thrills. Many a modern Mata Hari in all three nations is using her wiles to wrest a military secret from any gullible official who can be made to talk. But that's only part of spying.

In Germany lives an M. I. 5 agent whose sole job is to warn the British government when Germany is planning an air raid over London or Paris. If lucky, he'll die in bed. But probably they'll catch him.

Meanwhile his superior officer in London knows him only by a number.

Britain, proud of her spies, says Germany's espionage is still crude as it was during the World War. Lady, whom the Germans still revere as their greatest spy, was considered a hopeless bungler by the British. He was under observation for months before arrested, court martialed and shot in the Tower of London.

M. I. 5 is obliging enough to let a few German agents work unmoled in wartime, even speeding their reports through the mails. Once in the last war, when a German agent in England died, M. I. 5 was so sorry it continued forwarding faked reports for several months.

Joachim von Ribbentrop, German foreign minister, is credited with organizing the present Nazi espionage in Britain and France. In Spain last year a stupid Gestapo agent boasted Germany had 5,000 spies in Britain, many of whom were systematically rounded up as the war started. Ribbentrop favors women spies; after all, Mata Hari made a name for herself.

M. I. 5, the French and American secret services have pooled all their information about Nazi activity abroad into an organization called the Deuxieme bureau.

No one can audit expenditures of M. I. 5. Its funds are voted by parliament and no report of expenditure is ever made. No member of the opposition in the house of commons ever questions ministers about it. The story is told how, in Napoleon's day, a Kent farmer found a box containing 50,000 pounds along the post road near his cottage. He turned it over to the Bank of England, which advertised it, but after six months the money was returned to him. To this day most Englishmen are convinced it was secret service money for use on the continent. Yet no one was held accountable.

CHAPTER I

For one of those minutes that are not reckoned as time, but rather as a curious vessel to hold experience, she had stood still on the station platform, rapt and breathless and ungrateful of the inquisitive glances that rested on her taut figure. The desire had been acute to fling out her arms to the circle of the mountains that rose from the valley like a prodigiously wrought gold and purple bowl filled with the wine of sundown in May. She had stood, aware of the cool star on the southern crest, and of the silver shallop of the new moon a-sail with its veiled and mystical cargo. Then the words had shaped themselves in silence upon her lips, words she knew now had passed far back in her childhood, waiting for her return: "You beautiful! Oh, you beautiful!"

Only a few moments before, she had checked her luggage without giving her name, and the slight narrowing of the old clerk's eyes had brought a twitch of amusement to her mouth. She remembered him well enough, and although it was nine years since he had seen her—she had been but fourteen then—it was evident that some recollection stirred behind the old man's eyes. Perhaps, after all, she might have told him she was Autumn Dean, so that he might be the first to know that the Laird's daughter had come home. He was one of the "relics of Barkerville," as her father used to call them affectionately, those old men who had become as legendary as that long-dimmed field of gold. It would have been fitting to tell him first, this old man who was the essence of everything to which she was returning, this fabulous, romantic northland of her girlhood. But it amused her to keep her secret a little longer, to be to herself alone the daughter of old Jarvis Dean, the Laird of the "Castle of the Norns." That phrase brought an almost unbearable ennui for what had been when she herself had so named her father's house.

The murmur of the valley town, like the warm sound of a human heart within the cool heart of the hills, lay below her now as she made her way quickly up the steep dark street to the house she remembered in the mountain's cleft. A few new dwellings had appeared, the shade trees had grown, there was a denser thicket of shrubbery flanking the street, but the curious upward climb of the way was unmistakable. There, where the gravel road took a prankish turn as though seeking greater seclusion under the brow of the hill, old Hector Cardigan's cottage peered through, half suspiciously as she had remembered it, as though it had made its way from the inner secrecy of the mountain and were of half a mind to return there. Her heart gave a little leap of delight as she saw the "monkey-puzzle" tree on the tiny front lawn, and the two somber, meticulously clipped yews on either side of the shell-lined walk. The ancient wrought-iron Italian lamp hung as of old in the narrow crypt of the porch, but instead of the wanly flickering oil wick, a dim electric bulb glowed steadily behind the parchment. Old Hector had had his house wired, then!

Her impulse was to go bounding up the steep little steps two at a time, as she had been wont to do, but she reflected quickly that Hector, grown older and more than ever given to solitude, from her father's reports of him, might be startled at such an intrusion. Instead, she ran lightly up the flight to the carved, narrow, oak door, and clutched her handbag to still the excitement of her heart as she lifted the heavy brass knocker. She remembered that the knocker had been level with her eyes when she was a reedy kid of fourteen.

That was Hector's step now, quick and military still in its precision. She could remember that long polished panel of hardwood floor of the hall within, polished to mirror luster by Hector himself, as no servant could do it, had the old man ever been able to afford a servant. The door opened quickly, boldly, in its old manner of brusque inquiry. And there stood Hector, erect and fiery, fastidiously groomed as of old, severely dinner-jacketed, his gray hair grayer now but combed as ever with sculptured nicety. He stood very little above her own height, so that it seemed to her that she was smiling on a level with his eyes.

As she waited for his recognition, a curious thing was happening. She had snatched off her hat and stood with her head flung back, her hair shaken vividly about her cheeks. Hector's eyes were fastened upon her face with a look that grew from strange, incredulous amazement to something verging upon pain. His hand reached uncertainly out toward her, as though he expected her to vanish before his eyes, then his fingers grasped the door knob until the knuckles gleamed white. His face had become drained of all color, and although she saw that his hand leaned heavily on the door knob for support, Autumn laughed gayly, stepped over the threshold, and flung her arms about his neck. "Hector, Hector! Don't you know me, you old goose?" she demanded, shaking his shoulders as she smiled up at him.

"Forgive me, child," he said. "You—you startled me. I hadn't expected—but here, come inside. My manners are abominable!"

They proceeded into the low, shadowed living room, Autumn pausing just within the door to let her eyes sweep over the place. She wanted to make sure that the character of this extraordinary room had not changed. No, except for an added piece or two, it was the same as when she had last seen it—a haunting medley of the centuries, the oak walls dim and secret with their tapestries, the Louis XIV Gobelin, the fragile and priceless Renaissance grotesque with its quaint assembly vanishing irretrievably into the weave, vanishing back into the dead hands of the weaver, and the bold Francois Spierinx of Delft with its heraldry challenging Time.

"But—when did you get back, Autumn?" Hector asked, his voice firm now, with its old courtly inflection. "I've just come. I walked right up here from the station."

"But your father didn't tell me you were coming home."

Autumn tossed her hat and purse on the low Spanish settle, ruffled her fingers through her hair, and came over and stood beside him, her feet spread boyishly apart, her hands clasped behind her back. She looked at Hector with grave amusement.

"Your education is complete, I see."

"He isn't expecting me," she said lightly. "I want to surprise him."

Hector turned slowly away. "H-m-m, yes," he said, thoughtfully. "It will be a surprise to him."

"Besides, you old fraud, I wanted to surprise you. Think of it, Hector, it's nine years since you saw me last."

"Nine years! It seems impossible. Well—we're getting older. I'm approaching my dotage, child. But you—you are eternal youth itself. You have the heritage of your mother."

Autumn's laugh pealed out deliciously. "But not her beauty, Hector!"

"That was what startled me when I saw you at the door. You are her image."

He moved to the couch that faced the fireplace, seated himself, and clasped his hands between his knees. Autumn turned and looked down upon him, and a wave of swift pity for him swept over her, obliterating for a moment the bewilderment and dismay that were growing upon her at the strangeness of her reception. Time, the merciless invader, was storming the fine citadel of that gallant old soldier, and already had come an intimation of the ruin that was to be. Autumn went quickly and seated herself beside him, taking his brown hand in her own.

"Is this all the welcome you give me?" she asked. "You look as if I had brought you the plague. What's wrong, Hector?"

He looked at her thoughtfully, then got to his feet.

"There's nothing wrong, my dear. It's just the surprise, I suppose. It has knocked me quite silly. How are you going out?"

Autumn patted one of his brown hands affectionately. "I'm going to ride one of your hunters," she told him. "It wouldn't look right for the daughter of Jarvis Dean to go home in an automobile, would it?"

Hector smiled. "One of my hunters? I have only one left, my dear, but you are welcome. Are you going to ride in those clothes?"

"No. I'll telephone for my luggage. I have a riding habit handy in a bag. You see, I had it all planned. Where is the telephone, Hector? Isn't that frightfully stupid! It's the only thing about the house I have forgotten."

Hector pointed to a low Japanese gilt and black lacquer screen that stood below a Seventeenth century brass lantern clock with single hand. "Back there," he said.

When she had arranged for the immediate transfer of her luggage to Hector Cardigan's house, she returned to the fireplace. Hector had laid another log on the fire, and the pitch was snapping spiritedly. He had also brought out a remarkably cut old English decanter with a ruby glass snake wound about the neck. Two fragile wine glasses stood on the tray beside it, and the liquid within them glowed with a fixed and inviolate coruscation. On a Meissen porcelain plate were tiny frosted cakes and shortbreads.

"O, Hector! You sweet!" Autumn cried, kneeling before the wine to look at the light flaming through it. "I take back all I said about my welcome." She seated herself upon a battered hassock and took the glass he offered her. She sipped the wine and reached for one of the tempting little cakes.

"Chablis, isn't it?" she remarked. Hector smiled at her over his glass, and it seemed to her that he was more his old self again, the surprising and eternally enigmatic old self that she had known, Puck and Pan and Centaur, all in one, and sometimes Ariel and sometimes Caliban—all the naive and grotesque and impish legendary beings she knew.

"Your education is complete, I see," he laughed. Autumn laughed too, and ate another cake in one mouthful.

"Oh, when I went over," she said, "they were teaching children to drink so that they would stop begging for another war." Her mood changed then and she frowned down at the last drop that lay in the crystal hollow of the glass. "Seriously, though, that's why I wanted to come home, Hector. I had to get away from the constant reliving of a nightmare that my generation missed."

"I know—I know," Hector remarked. "The only real thing in the pampered life of Aunt Flo was the loss of her son—my cousin Frederick, you know. I don't know whether there is such a word or not—there ought to be—but Aunt Flo simply voluptuated in her loss. I couldn't live with it any longer."

"It isn't the same back home as—"

"Oh, I don't mean they are all like Aunt Flo," she hastened to add. "But there is something smothery about England now, with all those hungry-eyed women stepping on each other's toes. Do you know what I mean?"

"Yes," Hector admitted. "I think I do. You wanted room to breathe in. Well, you are right, too. Only—your father isn't the same man either. You will find him very difficult at times. He rarely comes to see me any more—and you know how devoted I have been to him."

"Father has always been difficult, Hector. But I've always loved him, nevertheless—and he has always loved me."

"Certainly. He loves the ground you walk on. I think, perhaps, that was one of the reasons he didn't want you to come back."

"Listen, Hector," Autumn said, shaking a finger at him, "I know father wanted me to stay in England. He wanted me to marry and settle down over there. Why?"

Hector coughed lightly and took another sip from his glass. "If Jarvis has any reason for not wanting you back here," he said finally, "he'll probably tell you what it is better than I could, my dear. Though, for that matter, I am inclined to agree with him in this, I think."

"What do you mean by that, Hector?"

"I mean—you should not have come home," Hector said abruptly.

Autumn got impatiently to her feet and stood before him, her hands on her hips. "Now, see here, Hector," she exclaimed, "are you going to be as unreasonable as father has been about my coming back where I belong? He has been perfectly ridiculous about it all this time. I've been fed up with Europe for two years."

Old Hector rubbed his palms nervously together. "I know, Autumn, I know. But—your father is not a happy man, my dear. He—he is given to moods of melancholy—of brooding. Moreover, he has never considered the ranch a proper environment for you. I'm afraid it will distress him very much that you have come back."

Autumn flung her head impetuously upward. "That is simple nonsense!" she declared. "Is Monte Carlo my proper environment? Is Mayfair?" She reached for a cigarette on the low lacquered table beside the couch, lit it and waved it triumphantly. "I've put up with erudition and polishing and attempts to marry me off to anemic noblemen until I'm sick of it, and now I'm home. I'm home because I belong here—here in British Columbia—here in the Upper Country—here between the Rockies and the Cascades. Doesn't that sound dramatic? And here I'm going to stick!"

"You'll probably stick, as you say," Hector commented. "You've got enough of Jarvis Dean in you for that. And if you hadn't—there's still the blood of Millicent Odell. If you don't get what you want from sheer stubbornness, you'll get it because no one will have the heart to refuse you."

"A very dangerous combination, eh, Hector?" Autumn observed.

She refused a second glass of wine, although Hector filled his own once more. She moved to the mantel and examined one or two of the curios upon it, amulets, ancient dice, an Italian dagger with a jeweled hilt, a string of Inca beads hanging down over the Dutch tiles. Some of the things she could recall, others had been acquired by Hector in his travels since she had last seen him. Presently her eyes fell upon a strange brass object with a strap attached to its top. She picked it up. Instantly a sound of unutterable purity pierced the room with a thin, thrilling resonance that seemed to drift on and on, beyond the confines of the bedecked walls. Startled and entranced with the beauty of the sound, Autumn turned to Hector and saw that he had risen and was coming toward her.

"I picked that up in Spain on a walking trip I took one year through the mountains," he told her. "It is a Basque bell—a Basque sheep-bell."

"I've never heard anything so lovely!" Autumn exclaimed, turning the bell up to examine it more carefully.

Hector looked down at it and whimsical wishfulness came into his face. "I should like you to have it, Autumn," he said. "When you come in again, take it out with you. There is no one else I would give it to, my dear—not even your father."

She looked up at him in quick, pleased surprise, holding the bell so that it chimed again, light and clear as the echo of a fay song in some unearthly place. "Do you really mean that, Hector?" she said softly. "I know how you hate to part with your treasures—and this one—"

"It's very old," Hector murmured, and his eyes narrowed with a strange absent dimness, as though he were looking into the remote past where his spirit abode in a brilliant reality. "Some shepherd—in the Pyrenees, perhaps—heard that bell fifty years ago—when your grandmother was a girl here in these hills, just over from Ireland. When your grandmother was breaking hearts up and down the Okanagan, my dear, some shepherd boy was listening to that plaintive note on some mountain-side—on the other side of the world."

THE FORERUNNER OF THE KING

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 3:1-17.
GOLDEN TEXT—Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.—Matthew 3:3.

When an earthly king visits his dominions or makes a journey to another land, great preparations are made for his coming. Everything is done to expedite his journey and to assure him of safety and comfort. The United States and Canada have recently had that interesting experience. The King of kings and Lord of Lords who in loving kindness and gracious condescension had come to earth to be our Redeemer had now grown to manhood and was prepared to enter on His public ministry. God sent John to be His forerunner to prepare the way and to herald His coming.

I. A Herald Prophetically Foretold (vv. 1, 3, 4).

The coming of John (usually called the Baptist) was of such vital concern to God that He had revealed it to His prophets hundreds of years before (see Isa. 40:3).

We should study and believe the message of the prophets. The same prophecies that pointed to John the Baptist and Christ's first coming also point to the second coming (Mal. 3:1-6; 4:1-6). We know the former took place, why should we doubt the fulfillment of the latter? We do well to take heed to the word of prophecy (II Pet. 1:19).

Let us also prepare the way of the Lord, not as John did, for his was a special ministry, but by making ways for the gospel to reach the hearts of men. We can remove hindrances and obstructions, preparing their hearts to receive Him as Saviour and Lord.

II. An Unusual Man with a Burning Message (vv. 2, 6-12).

What an arresting appearance John must have made as he emerged to the edge of the wilderness to present his startling message! God had kept him (like Moses and others) in the quiet of the desert where He could talk with him, away from the distractions of so-called civilization. This simple living had made John a striking personality, quite unusual and unconventional. The man who strives for such an appearance to attract attention is but a fool, but on the other hand unconventionality will not destroy one's usefulness if he has a message from God.

The preaching of John was a burning message of repentance. There had been no prophetic message since the time of Malachi, and in the intervening 400 years the religious life of the Jews had settled down into a barren legalistic formalism. John came with a simple, practical, and plain-spoken indictment of sin, which led to repentance and which made religion vital and real again.

We know that the gospel of the grace of God in Christ goes far beyond the preaching of John. But we also know that the Church needs to get back to the proclamation of a vital heart-searching message, and some genuine old-fashioned repentance. Then we like John will bring men to Christ for salvation, for sanctification, for service.

III. A Humble but Privileged Servant of Christ (vv. 13-17).

The crowning event in the ministry of John was the recognition of Jesus as He came to be baptized. He was deeply conscious of his own unworthiness for this great work and pointed to the coming Saviour as the One in whom they should put their trust (vv. 11 and 14. See also John 1:29). John was not jealous of his own position, nor seeking his own advancement (see v. 3 and John 3:30).

To this faithful and humble servant came the inestimable privilege of baptizing the Saviour. The baptism of Jesus presents a mystery which we cannot fully solve. It is certain that He did not come to be baptized for the remission of sin, for He knew no sin. The best explanation seems to be that in His obedience to His Father He was willing to subject Himself to every ordinance of God—a spirit which is not too common, by the way, among His professed followers. He was not a sinner, but He took the sinner's place, and thus He both entered upon His ministry and pointed forward to that day when God made Him "who knew no sin" to be "made sin for us" so that "we might be made the righteousness of God in him" (II Cor. 5:21).

Gracious Amid Gloom

Yet for all my Lord's gloom, I find Him sweet, gracious, loving, kind; and I want both pen and words to set forth the fairness, beauty and sweetness of Christ's love, and the honor of this cross of Christ, which is glorious to me, though the world thinketh shame thereof.—Samuel Rutherford.

when the motorist fails to realize the terrific speed he is traveling at sixty miles an hour and how long it will take him to stop the car.

An English Judge discovered a very simple formula by which this could be figured. The answer is correct within 2 per cent. The formula is to take the speed shown on the

Try it.
I am sure this will convince you that your brakes must be in good physical condition, and above all, that your judgment as to when speed should be used must be of the very best. "Safety with Light" Awards Made

Members of the Long Beach Junior Chamber of Commerce which won highest award in the national "Safety with Light" Program, plot survey of their city's night traffic accidents. Survey disclosed that nine fatal streets in Long Beach accounted for 70% of all night accidents.

Surveys Stress Darkness Hazard; Lighting for Safety Urged

CHICAGO—First place in the national "Safety with Light" contest, launched in March, 1939 by the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce, has been awarded to Long Beach, California, it has just been officially announced. Other national award winners were Denver, Colorado, and Dallas, Texas, which tied for second place, with San Francisco and Chicago at their heels. Des Moines, Iowa, Gary, Indiana, and Greeley, Colorado, also received recognition for outstanding activities.

The program conducted among its 600 member organizations throughout the country, already actively participated in by Junior Chambers of Commerce in 43 cities, is designed to eliminate the increasing traffic deaths due to inadequate visibility after dark and to the fact that street lighting in most cities today is 20 years out of date and not adapted to modern traffic.

The eight cities winning awards and the other 35 cities which conducted "Safety with Light" programs all made extensive use of the free material supplied by the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce, including educational literature, car cards, films, billboards, etc.

Important in the "Safety with Light" programs were the "Fatal Street Surveys" analyzing tens of thousands of individual accident records in the competing cities. So revealing were these surveys that Junior Chambers of Commerce were able to make recommendations for the installation of safety lighting on the specific basis of local records. In many cases, city officials requested that such a survey be made part of the Chamber's annual program.

For example, Junior Chamber surveys showed excess night accidents and fatalities cost Long Beach, California a total of $9,875,000 per year, or an average of $4,880 per mile of streets. Nine thoroughfares in Long Beach accounted for 70% of all night accidents. Twice as many night fatalities as day fatalities occurred on Long Beach Streets, despite the fact that only one-quarter of the traffic moves on them after dark.

The survey of the Denver Junior Chamber of Commerce revealed two particularly fatal streets representing only 1.4% of the total street mileage but accounting for more than 13% of all night accidents in Denver. In sixteen months on one street alone, five people were killed at night—none were killed in the daytime. Fifteen streets in Dallas, Texas, accounted for 35% of all of the city's night accidents. And so, in the case of each of the cities conducting surveys, the imposing hazard of after dark traffic was uncovered.

The national "Safety with Light" program has received such high praise from safety organizations, governmental bureaus, and individuals, that it will be intensified during the year 1939-1940. It is expected that at least 200 Junior Chambers of Commerce will undertake active programs.

Friends of Dr. Robert L. Paxton of Lemont in the Orland territory, were shocked and grieved to hear that he committed suicide last Saturday night at his office in Lemont.

A coroner's jury met in the village hall of Lemont Monday and opened an inquiry into the suicide of the doctor. Dr. Paxton swallowed poison Saturday night in his office at 304 Canal street in Lemont in the presence of two friends. He died five minutes later.

The friends were Mr. and Mrs. John Steinke of Lemont. They told the police that Dr. Paxton had asked them to come to his office, but had given them no hint of his intention. They said that when they arrived he greeted them, swallowed the poison and dropped dead on a couch. He died before a doctor could be summoned.

Lemont police said Dr. Paxton left two notes ascribing domestic troubles as the motive for his act. His wife, Mrs. Dorothy Paxton and their daughter Betty Lou, 4, reside at 19 Eureka street in Lemont.

Nation's Oil Industry Produces Large Share of World Supply

Petroleum Plays Important Role in American Economic Life.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

Petroleum, the industry that this year is celebrating its eightieth anniversary of the discovery of oil in this country, still remains an industrial problem child. The year has been marked by a severe price crisis and temporary curtailment of oil production in the seven states that lead the United States in total barrels yielded.

The shut-down of oil production in these seven states, if complete, would bottle up approximately 71 per cent of the United States' output of the product.

Furthermore, the wells affected by such a shut-down ordinarily produce about 45 per cent of the world's flow of petroleum. The states involved are Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, Kansas, New Mexico, Michigan, and Arkansas (in the order of their volume of output). These include four of the leading oil states of the nation, which in turn is by far the leading oil producer of the world. United States wells last year poured forth nearly a billion and a quarter barrels—six times the output of Soviet Russia, which ranked second. Texas alone, has more than 80,000 wells.

Discovered 80 Years Ago. The vast United States petroleum industry is a young one, dating from Colonel Drake's striking oil in Pennsylvania just 80 years ago. But the industry now involves investments of some $15,000,000,000, employees numbering 750,000, and innumerable consumers, not the least of whom are the drivers of America's 31,000,000 motor vehicles.

In the value of its varied and widely used products, petroleum ranks fourth among the industrial giants of the century (steel, automobiles, meat, petroleum).

TANK FARM. Typical of the great change the petroleum industry is making in America's economic picture is this scene of a modern petroleum tank farm which has replaced an Oklahoma wheat field of twenty years ago. From fields like this flow nearly a billion and a quarter barrels of oil each year.

The driver who pulls into a filling station and casually gives the "Fill 'er up" order, is tapping an industry that reaches from coast to coast, from mile-deep oil wells through pipe lines, refineries, chemical laboratories, tank ships and cars, large central accounting offices, to the curbstone pump of vari-colored gasoline.

Numerous Methods of Use.

Anyone who lights a kerosene lamp, buys an oil furnace, rides an airplane or a Diesel-powered passenger train, oils a squeaking hinge, crosses an asphalt-covered street, unwraps paraffin paper from a sandwich, or uses anything imported on an oil-burning boat, is taking advantage of the subterranean power pumped into circulation by the United States' extensive petroleum industry.

Glycerine and insecticides, antifreeze chemicals for automobile engines and quick-drying chemicals for brushless shaving creams, industrial alcohols, lubricating oils to fight friction in the galloping machinery of today's high speeds, non-nauseating anesthetics, and plastics are among the varied products which accompany gasoline out of modern refineries. Some of the by-product chemicals take their places on the pharmacist's shelf, or go down on the farm to speed the ripening of fruit and vegetables when a late spring has cut down the normal growing period. Synthetic rubber, explosives, and ingredients for printing ink and photographic supplies are other uses found for petroleum products.

Western Ideas Affect Ankara, Turkish Capital

City Undergoes Complete Change in 16-Year Period.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

The rise in less than two decades of a provincial town to a world capital is the story of Ankara, Turkey. Interwoven with the rise of the city is the story of a people finding new life.

Ankara was a city of only about 20,000 inhabitants in 1923 when the late leader Mustafa Kemal Atatürk announced that it was to succeed Istanbul as the capital of Turkey.

Narrow streets that wound through this inland city on the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus were flanked with whitewashed buildings whose upper stories extended so far over the not-too-clean passageways that pedestrians were shielded from the blazing sun. Bullock carts and donkeys were the chief means of transportation; the water supply was questionable as to purity and undependable as to quantity; there was practically no street lighting; oriental bazaars were the chief shopping places; fezzes and turbans topped all masculine Turkish heads, while the women covered their faces in traditional Moslem fashion when they ventured beyond the privacy of their homes.

Ancient Atmosphere Remains.

Although the government has spent more than $400,000,000 in recent years to modernize the city,

KEMAL ATATÜRK is the man responsible for the changing of the provincial town of Ankara to a world capital. Atatürk, the late ruler of Turkey, who introduced many western ideas into his country, decided in 1923 that Ankara would succeed Istanbul as his capital city and he immediately began a number of civic improvements which have resulted in a modern city.

the old town has not been entirely stripped of its ancient atmosphere. Lofty minarets still rise fingerlike above streets that have changed little except for electric lights, water mains and a thorough cleaning. Other Ankara streets, however, have become well-paved boulevards and modern buildings now facing them have taken the place of old structures.

From its humble beginnings, just 16 years ago, Ankara has grown in population more than sixfold. It now shelters approximately 125,000 inhabitants.

Perfection in Pies

There's something about a piece of really good pie, with its flaky, golden-brown crust and a filling simply oozing flavor and goodness, that makes it the crowning glory of a meal. Just a whiff of the fragrance of a juicy apple pie, or the sight of a quivery custard in a crust that crumbles at the first touch whets the appetite; and one glance at a slice of dainty chignon pie, with its feather-light filling, is enough to make even a strong-willed calorie-counter forget his diet!

Making pies that achieve perfection isn't as difficult as it sounds. Standardized equipment (such as measuring cups and spoons) and oven thermometers and heat control have taken the uncertainty out of measuring and baking. With a proven recipe, good ingredients, standard equipment and some easily acquired technique, any woman can make good pie and make it every time!

Pointers on Making Pastry.

1. Unless you are making hot water pastry, have the ingredients for making pie crust cold.
2. Cut shortening into the flour, using a pastry blender or fork; or, if you're an experienced cook, and work quickly, blending in the shortening with fingers is permissible.
3. Add water sparingly, using only enough to hold the ingredients together. Handle dough as little and as lightly as possible after adding water.
4. Roll out the dough on a lightly floured board or on a heavy canvas. Cover the rolling pin with a child's white cotton stocking (with the foot cut off) and flouring it lightly simplifies handling the dough.
5. Place the dough loosely in the pan to help prevent shrinking.

Grandmother's Sour Cream Pie.

- 1 cup raisins (coarsely cut)
 - 1/2 cup water
 - 3/4 cup sugar
 - 1 cup sour cream
 - 2 eggs (beaten)
 - 1 teaspoon vanilla
 - 1/2 teaspoon salt
- Pastry
- Combine raisins, water, and sugar, and simmer for 5 minutes. Mix the sour cream and the eggs, add the stewed raisins, vanilla and salt. Bake in a double crust at 400 degrees for the first 10 minutes, reducing the temperature to 350 degrees for 40 minutes longer.

Lemon Meringue Pie.

- 1 cup sugar
 - 1/4 cup cornstarch
 - 1/4 teaspoon salt
 - 3/4 cup cold water
 - 3/4 cup boiling water
 - 3 egg yolks
 - 1 tablespoon butter
 - 1/4 cup lemon juice
 - 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
- Combine sugar, cornstarch, and salt. Add cold water and stir until smooth. Then add boiling water and cook, stirring constantly, until mixture is clear and thick. Cook 3 minutes longer. Beat egg yolks and stir cooked mixture into them. Add all remaining ingredients, return to flame and cook 1 minute. Pour immediately into baked pie shell. Top with meringue.

Meringue.

- 3 egg whites
 - 6 tablespoons sugar
 - 1/2 teaspoon salt
- Beat egg whites partially; then add sugar slowly, beating until mixture is stiff. Bake in slow oven (300 degrees) for 18 minutes.

Flaky Pie Crust.

- (Makes 2 pie shells)
 - 1 1/2 cups flour
 - 1/2 teaspoon salt
 - 1/2 cup shortening
 - 3 to 4 tablespoons ice water
- Sift flour and salt into mixing bowl. Add shortening. Chill 20 to 30 minutes, then cut in the shortening until it is about the size of peas.

Add ice water gradually, mixing only until the dough can be gathered up into a ball. Chill at least 1/2 hour. Roll out on a piece of canvas cloth which has been stretched taut over dampened table-top or bread board. Slip child's white stocking (without foot) over rolling pin, flour canvas and rolling pin, and roll out dough to 1/8-inch thickness. Fit lower crust in pie tin. If baking a one-crust pie, prick with fork, and bake in hot oven (450 degrees) 12 to 15 minutes.

Pumpkin Chignon Pie.

- (Makes one 10-inch pie)
- 2 tablespoons gelatin
- 1/4 cup cold water
- 3 eggs
- 1 cup sugar
- 1 1/2 cups pumpkin (strained)
- 1/2 cup milk
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 teaspoon ginger
- 1/2 teaspoon cinnamon
- 1/4 teaspoon nutmeg
- 1/4 teaspoon clove

Soak gelatin in cold water for 5 minutes. Separate yolks and whites of eggs. Beat yolks until light, and combine with half of the sugar, the strained pumpkin, milk, salt, and spices. Cook over hot water until the mixture thickens, stirring constantly. Remove from fire, add gelatin, and stir until dissolved. Cool. When the mixture thickens, beat the egg whites until stiff but not dry, and gradually beat in the remaining sugar. Fold into the pumpkin. Pour into baked pie shell and chill thoroughly before serving. May be served with whipped cream generously sprinkled with ginger-snap crumbs.

Magic Mocha Nut Tarts.

- 2 squares unsweetened chocolate
 - 1 1/2 cups (1 can) sweetened condensed milk
 - 1/2 cup strong coffee
 - 1 cup walnut meats (cut fine)
- Baked tart shells
- Melt chocolate in top of double boiler. Add sweetened condensed milk, and stir over boiling water for 5 minutes or until mixture thickens. Add coffee, stir until thoroughly blended. Add chopped walnut meats. Pour into baked tart shells. Garnish with remaining chopped nuts. Chill before serving.

Custard Pie.

- (Makes 1 pie)
 - 2 cups milk (scalded)
 - 3 eggs
 - 5 tablespoons sugar
 - 1/2 teaspoon salt
 - 1 teaspoon vanilla extract
 - 1 dash nutmeg
 - 1 pastry shell (baked)
- Scald milk. Beat eggs slightly and to them add the sugar, salt, milk, and vanilla extract. Mix thoroughly and pour custard mixture into a well oiled pie plate. Bake in a slow oven (300 degrees) until custard is set—about 40 minutes. In a second pie plate, exactly the same size as that used for the custard pie, bake a one-crust pastry shell. Cool. Then when the custard is thoroughly cooled and just before serving, gently slip the custard right into the pastry shell. Serve at once.

A Late Hour

Uncle Lige bought a clock, so tall that it was almost impossible to get it into the house. The old man was extremely proud of it, and found it very good company. He would lie awake nights to hear it tick.

One night the clock got out of order and began to strike. The old man awoke and counted one hundred and two. He promptly sat up in bed, and calling to his wife said: "Cynthia, get up, get up. It's later than I've ever known it to be."

Strange Facts

Amused the Ladies
Life Stage Contract
Mongolians Marked

As late as 1921, twelve hundred clergymen, representing fifteen denominations, met in Philadelphia to choose and promote a "moral gown for women." The creation finally selected was somber in color, sacklike in design and reached from the neck to the ground. The ladies were merely amused.

The longest term theatrical contracts made at the present time are those issued by the Comedie Francaise, the French national theater in Paris. An artist who becomes a member of this company is obliged to sign an agreement to remain for twenty years.

The ticking of a watch may be heard at a distance of fifty feet by placing it in the proper position before a parabolic mirror and having the observer stand at the point where the reflected sound waves converge.

"The Mongolian spot," is a patch of pigmentation appearing on nearly all children of Mongoloid peoples. It occurs at the lower end of the spine, has a dark blue or mulberry color, is about the size of a silver quarter, and disappears before the fifth year.—Collier's.

Curtains That Will Fit Your Color Schemes

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS
THE first curtains of this kind I ever saw were made of the long pieces of good material left at each side of a sheet after the center part had begun to wear. These were dipped in dye to make a soft cream color for the foundation part of the curtains. Wide stripes of gingham and narrow ones of prepared bias trimming were then stitched in place to make stripes. The chart shows the colors that were used and gives the widths and spacing of the stripes.

Of course, you will have some ideas of your own about the stripes and colors. Perhaps you can copy the color scheme of the rug in the room or the wall paper. Or colors in a picture may offer a suggestion for colors for the whole room.

Whatever the materials used you will have fun planning the stripes. In case you should want to use short lengths of goods for the foundation part of the curtains, stitch these together with the seam on the right side; then place a stripe over the joining.

There are 32 other homemaking ideas in the booklet which Mrs. Spears has just prepared for our readers. All directions are clearly illustrated. You will be delighted to own one of these new booklets. Enclose 10 cents in coin with name and address, to Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill., and booklet will be postpaid by return mail.
